

Girl Scout council receives grant from group

The Girl Scouts of Kansas Heartland, of which Goodland Girl Scouts is in, has received $27,000 to be used for increasing girls' involvement in science, technology, engineering and math from Cargill Cares.

"We are thrilled to be a part of this nationwide initiative," said Shelly Chenoweth, chief executive of Girl Scouts of Kansas Heartland. "Kansas is ripe with opportunities for girls to explore careers in aerospace, technology and engineering. And this isn't just important for girls, it's important for our state. State economic growth is driven through innovation that comes largely out of science, technology, engineering and math fields." Cargill Cares is an employee-led community support initiative of Cargill. "Science, technology, engineering and math are subjects that are extremely important for children to learn if they are going to be competitive in a global market. Cargill is pleased that the Girl Scouts of

Kansas Heartland is exposing their Scouts to the exciting possibilities through the science, technology, engineering and math program," said Debbie Nece, regulatory affairs manager, Cargill. "Hands-on fun will lead to further interest and knowledge. Cargill supports innovative programs that improve academic achievement, develop logic and thinking skills, and promotes leadership development for all our future."
