in which they can partner with other agencies and offer their providers a chance to get outside the clinic and promote disease prevention rather than just treating illnesses.

New Frontiers Health Services, the clinic owned by the hospital, has added three physician assistants who will serve both the hospital and the clinic. Kathy Kimpler, Carl Woofter and Cory Anderson have been brought onto the team.

Another physician will be joining the clinic in July to replace Dr. Cristine Goodwin, whom they lost last year. Dr. Celeste Rains is still practicing at the clinic and Dr. Victor Hildyard of Colby is part of the active medical staff as well.

"I think it will expand our capacity to treat patients and see patients and definitely will provide the community with more access to their health-care providers," said Newcomer, clinic director, "and it will also give them choice in who their provider's going to be."

Logan County Manor, a 45-bed nursing home owned by the hospital, also had positive news this past year. Aimee Zimmerman, risk manager, said their staff turnover rate has decreased, which has improved resident care and satisfaction. She said they have worked
