Kit Carson Hospital changing with the times

The Kit Carson County Memorial Hospital in Burlington has been trying to cope with changing health care regulations and maintain quality care for its patients on the eastern plains of Colorado.

The 19-bed critical access hospital provides primary care, inpatient and outpatient services and a level 4 trauma service, as well as home health care and hospice services.

The patient wing features 16 private rooms with baths as well as three two-person rooms. Two of the private rooms are "negative-pressure" rooms for patients who require isolation. There are three delivery suites and a nursery, said Julie Jacobson, director of growth and development for the hospital.

The emergency department has street level, walk-in access to a four-bed trauma bay, two emergency treatment rooms and a decontamination shower for patients who've encountered hazardous chemicals.

The hospital runs a satellite health clinic in Stratton, Colo., to serve the needs of Stratton and surrounding communities.

The hospital's specialty clinic has visiting doctors specializing in everything from asthma and allergy to urology, dealing with urinary-tract and prostate problems. The facility accommodates a clinical and surgical schedule for 20 doctors from the Colorado Front Range area.

Specialists who visit the hospital are Dr. Stephen Anest, vascular surgery; Dr. Alfred Carr and Dr. Owen Riechman, ear, nose and throat; Dr. Victor Dabelea, obstetrics and gynecology; Dr. Vadim Fayngersh, pulmonology and internal medicine; Dr. Charles Frankum, general surgery, colon and rectal surgery; Dr.

join the team of physicians in September 2013 alongside newly recruited Dr. John Dygert, who will begin this August.

These physicians will bring with them a plethora of new services. Northwest Kansas will have full-time access to major and emergency surgeries, on-call trauma coverage, gynecological procedures and enhanced obstetrical needs, biopsies and diagnostics and additional family medicine services.

Unger says Citizens believes the client base will explode. With new doctors, new services and new patients comes the need for new space. That is where a $1.9 million expansion planned over the course of the three years comes into play.

"First and foremost, we are tremendously excited about the urgent and accelerated growth we are experiencing," said Unger. "With the shortage of physicians across rural America, it has taken some years to establish a solid medical provider base and to find a general surgeon who fits our needs. Now we have to look at making accommodations to fit their needs, too.

"That means upgrading the surgical suites, along with the equipment and instruments that will be required to perform the new line of surgical services," she said. "Dr. Sarah Gabel and Dr. Dygert are both well trained in family medicine and obstetrics care, and so strengthening and expanding our facilities at the hospital and clinic will also be a part of our expansion project.

"We will upgrade and modernize our obstetrical wing to meet the growing demand. When the Gabels arrive in 2013, Family Center for Health Care will have 13 providers
