The hilltop cross caught the morning light before one of the sunrise services. The cross, located near the Beaver Creek in northeast Sherman County, still stands today.

Easter at a 20-foot tall cross mounted on a hilltop in northeastern Sherman County.

The cross - located on County Road 32 about 14 miles north of U.S. 24 – was built from pieces of an old dismantled bridge over the Beaver Creek by Wayne Deeds. His daughter, Jeanie Scheilds, had asked him to build it. Wayne was also inspired by the cross to write a poem about the Resurrection.

The cross was finished in 1971, and saw many sunrise services for whomever wanted to attend. Wayne's wife Irma Deeds said the services were

For many years, churches held sunrise services on run by churches in Bird City and the Pleasant Home Church. Irma said given the time of year, the services were often very chilly.

> Volunteers cooked breakfasts of scrambled eggs, cinnamon rolls and juice for anyone who attended. Irma said that some years as many as 125 people came to the services.

Although services have not been held at the cross for many years, it is still standing today, and Irma said the family is planning to try and move it, however the timbers may be rotten by now.

Candidates questioned at forum

The four candidates for Goodland is contributing a percentage of the School Board and six for Goodland City Commission gathered in the high school auditorium Monday for a candidate forum. About 50 people attended.

The Goodland Area Chamber of Commerce sponsored the forum. Kevin Bottrell, editor of the Goodland Star-News, acted as moderator with assistance from Chamber Director Michael Solomon.

School Board

The candidates used their opening statements to introduce themselves. Lee Ihrig said he was running to look out for the students, and that parents should step up and take an interest in changes that need to be made to how the district is run. Terry Smith said he is also passionate about helping students, and wants to see every student given the opportunity to go on to higher education or be ready to enter the workforce after high school. Mike Hamilton said that as a former teacher he brings an education background to the table. Ron Vignery said his father insisted on him getting an education, which helped him in life, and it is critical to give every student that opportunity.

The candidates all said they are in favor of the bond issue, which will levy money for building improvements at West, North and the High School. Vignery said the district has the same number of buildings it had decades ago, but significantly fewer students, so reducing the number of buildings would better serve the taxpayer. Hamilton said the timing is right for the bond, since the state project cost, something which may go away. He went on to say that if the bond doesn't pass, the district will have to find another approach to deal with its building problems.

Smith said he was also in favor of the bond that failed two years ago. He singled out the safety improvements that the district wants to make, such as eliminating most of the outside doors at the elementary schools. Ihrig said the district has done a good job addressing its needs and getting the information out to the public.

When asked if there were any the curriculum, Ihrig said there is always room for improvement, and it takes teachers willing to push their students to do better. Smith said the district is on track, but he would like to see vocational agriculture taught at the high school as well as art taught from kindergarten on.

Hamilton agreed that the schools are missing art at the younger levels. He said that with the No Child Left Behind law, schools often have to focus on core classes.

"They need to take a breath," he said,"and look at ways to bring back electives."

Vignery said core subjects like math, reading and writing are important, so is art, music and foreign language.

'They may cost money," he said., "but we should be able to do it. Students need that exposure."

chief executive officer Jeff Bezos and his team recovered more than 25,000 pounds of Apollo-era F-1 rocket-engine parts from the Atlantic Ocean floor, the artifacts have arrived at the Kansas Cosmosphere and Space Center's internationally recognized SpaceWorks conservation and restoration division.

It is at SpaceWorks' 20,000square-foot facility that conservators, artisans, craftsmen and engineers will painstakingly separate the components of each recovered piece - some weighing more than 2,000 pounds-and continually flush each piece in 15x20-foot basins containing water and anti-corrosion agents to remove ocean debris and prevent further decay. Once each piece is stabilized, it will undergo a detailed conservation process, including thorough cleaning, photography and a meticulously documented provenance of its components, manufacture and use.

To the citizens of Sherman County,

On Tuesday, April 2nd, you will be asked to vote on an important school facilities project and bond issue. As your school board, we have put a great deal of time and effort into presenting you with a plan that, together, we feel is in the best interest of our community, and most importantly, our kids.

Because it is an extensive plan that includes a complicated two question ballot, we want to make sure that you are given every opportunity to get the information you need to make an informed vote.

We hope you accept our invitation to attend one of two informational meetings on Monday, April 1st. The meetings will be held in the GHS Auditorium at 11:30 a.m. and 7 p.m.

Thank you for your consideration, USD 352 Board of Education

Other cities facing similar voting issues

Goodland isn't the only northwest Kansas city facing a vote next week on a large spending project. The Oberlin pool has been another divisive proposal also involving a sales tax vote.

Mayor Rob McFee's principled stand against signing anything to do with the Oberlin pool could wind up costing city taxpayers a lot of money.

While the mayor has every right to refuse his signature on anything the City Council passes, while we're sure the mayor means well, while the mayor could even be right - we think he's made his point.

Further delay to the pool, approved by voters in a 2-1 landslide last fall, is unfair to the town's young families and could be costly. There has to be a better way.

The council has agreed, following advice of its bond lawyers, to finance the pool through bonds issued by a public building commission. That keeps the $2 million-plus debt outside the city's statutory borrowing limit.

The mayor calls that a "criminal workaround" and refuses to have any part in it. Since the voters also provided for a way to pay the bonds with a 1.5-cent sales tax, however, the whole thing is a closed loop. It should be outside the bonding limit.

Nor is it "criminal." It's allowed under a law passed by the same Legislature that created the bond limit. It's legal, proper and in this case, sensible.

The firm that designed the pool warns that prices for the $2.1 million project could rise as much as 20 percent a year, meaning that a year's delay could cost taxpayers $200,000 to $400,000. And that is a big price to pay.

Others in town cling to their opposition. Their arguments are logical, but the voters didn't buy them. Still, they persist. It's like there never was a vote to settle the issue.

The pool backers won fair and square. Abig majority of the people in Oberlin want a new pool. And the time to delay is past.

We're not asking anyone to change their mind or abandon their principles. Just sit down and let the majority rule. If he can't sign documents for the pool, thereby creating a two-week delay every time something comes up, the mayor ought to step aside temporarily and let the council president sign instead.

The rest should find another fight to pick and let the town unify behind the pool. The issue is settled. You lost. Let it go, before it costs all of us money we shouldn't have to spend. - Steve Haynes

Vote 'no' on school bond issue

To the Editor:

I don't usually write letters to the editor, but I'm really concerned over the school bond issue and sales tax issue.

Ster-news

I have lived in Goodland most of my life. I was born and raised here; I went from kindergarten through high school here; I graduated in 1956; I raised two children who graduated here. I have seen many changes in my 74 years, but I have to say I have never seen our city in such terrible shape. Here are a few of the reasons I feel this way:

• We haven't any industry to help our economy.

• The drought that we have had hurt all of us, not just the farmers. If the farmers are hurting, so are we.

and real estate according to the last appraisals. Some may say "well I rent so that won't affect Walmart.

me," but it will. The home owner will have to up your rent to meet the taxes.

• Our sales tax is already over 8 percent. • Out electricity bills went up 16 percent.

• Groceries are getting higher.

• Just drive down Main Street and notice around 15 empty buildings that used to have a thriving business in them to help out economy.

• Our taxes are likely to go up on farm ground men's store where you can buy men's suits. • We don't have a grocery store except

• Recently it has come to our attention we may lose our hospital.

Now back to the bond issue. We need to focus on our economy to fill up these empty stores. We lost the sugar beet factory and Over the Road Trucking businesses. In the trucking business alone we lost 44 families that had children in the schools. That is why we need to concentrate on getting some industry to help our economy and help create revenue on the tax rolls.

Maybe the school board should sell the North school to a developer and that would maybe give the school board enough money to fix up the schools.

Think about what I have said and vote no • We don't have a ladies clothing store or a on the school bond issue and sales tax issue. Thank you.

Outside of immediate family and friends, I recall specific Goodland School District community members who directly shaped who I am today, providing a solid foundation for future successes. I can remember North Elementary School teachers who gave their own money from their own wallets to buy supplies for our classes. I can remember junior high teachers who offered additional time, making sure I could further explore interests and staying well past scheduled hours so I could finish to completion. I recall high school faculty who gave me countless insights on what it would take to continue my education beyond high school.

Now, I have the opportunity to work across different companies and countries around the world. The Goodland School District foundation gave me values that you can apply in any professional facet. It is a complex world out there that requires students to keep pace whether their future takes them to the other side of town or the other side of the world.

When I heard about the school bond issue, I felt compelled to reach out. This is more than just building a building. It is about those who spend their time teaching, leading and fostering and, most importantly, it is about those students who benefit from such gifts. You can certainly not vote for improving the building but you will be giving a lot less to the very part of our community who gives so much.

This school bond provides a safe and great environment for Goodland's children. The school bond can represent what I think truly reflects the Goodland spirit: a community who works together, helping today's students and those still to come.

I would hope you would do something that I couldn't, which is to give more back to Goodland than I received.

Safety a big issue on bond decision

To the Editor:

I was disappointed when the last bond failed.

I taught for many years in the USD 352 School District. During those years, I often wondered how we could financially maintain and staff twice as many buildings as a school with a similar (but larger) enrollment (Colby). We paid (and are paying) for approximately twice as many: utility bills, administrator's salaries, kitchen salaries and janitorial salaries. Reducing the number of buildings in our district is long overdue and a fiscally smart move.

I was more disappointed when our last bond issue failed because of the safety of our children. Six years ago when my son and I went to his daughter's elementary school in a small town in Iowa to take her out for lunch: press a buzzer, identify himself, then be allowed to enter the building. They were proactive regarding the safety of their children.

Inclement weather is the other safety issue that the proposed bond issue addresses. I taught at both Central and West. I felt like my students (second graders) were safer at Central because of the basement. I did not feel that they were safe at West.

I appreciate that the bond issue focuses on keeping our children safe. Please vote yes! Sandy Jamison

To the Editor:

A surprised neighbor asked why we are voting "yes" on the school bond issue. After all, we didn't graduate from Goodland, our kids didn't graduate from Goodland, our grandchildren live out of state, and we have not lived here all that long (four years).

We could easily have mentioned low interest rates, safety improvements, bringing buildings up to code, accessibility and improved learning environment. Those are valid reasons for voting yes on the bond issue.

But more importantly, we believe we have a civic responsibility to support the children in our community. Our tax dollars are an expression of our shared values. When our community values families with children, we need to vote for those values.

Kent and I both grew up in blue collar families, and were the first generation in our families to graduate from college. Our parents and communities made the sacrifices through their tax dollars to build new schools, so we could have the opportunity to make the most of our lives. And, yes, for our parents they were sacrifices!

As Goodland tries to attract new doctors and health care providers, bright and innovative teachers, and new businesses to strengthen and grow our community, they will all consider the schools and education system in making their decision whether to call Goodland home. Our schools, in their current shape, are not a draw.

It's been 45 years since Goodland's last school bond. These improvements are long overdue. We encourage everyone, particularly grandparents and seniors, to vote "yes" on the school bond issue.

School board, city candidates questioned at forum on Monday

The candidates were asked their opinion of the district's plan to put the seventh and eighth grades in the high school building. Vignery said that when he went to school, that's where junior high classes were held and they didn't have any problems. He said the students will keep themselves separate. Hamilton praised the plan, calling it financially efficient. Smith and Ihrig were also in favor of moving the junior high school students.

The next question asked how the candidates feel the board should approach dealing with funding reductions from the state. Ihrig said about all the district can do is find ways to better use the resources it has, and that it would be better to pass the bond now, before assistance from the state dries up.

Smith agreed that since there is always the possibility of more reductions, passing the bond now would be beneficial. Hamilton said the district has done a good job obtaining state and federal grants.

"If you have to have a reduced budget," he said. "You'll have to take a hard look at your finances."

Vignery said he could remember when the state first took over school finance, and that if state money gets reduced, the district will have to decide what its priorities are, and go back to the local voters to decide on spending and taxing as much as possible.

The final question asked if there were any other improvements the candidates feel need to be made. Vignery said the district should then speak, and John Garcia spoke fuel sources.

'You won't always get it, but you should always expect it," he said.

Hamilton said another consequence of No Child Left Behind is that the low level and high level students can get swept aside. He said he would like to continue the district's current approach, which gives a lot of instruction time to kids at all skill levels.

Smith said he would like the district to look at its transportation fleet. Many of the vehicles are getting old and although some have been replaced recently, there are more that need looked at. He said he also hopes to see test scores continue to rise.

Ihrig said there is always room for improvement in test scores, teacher recruitment and facility upgrades. City Commission

In his opening statement, city commission candidate Bill Finley said the city is facing many challenges, and although he is sometimes accused of being too conservative, this is a time to be conservative. Phil Erickson said that through his many years working for the city streets department, he has an insight into what needs to be done. Brian Linin said he and his family live in Goodland by choice, and he has an interest in seeing it succeed. J.J. Howard, who moved here in 1992, said that growing up on a farm means he's no stranger to hard work, and said he wants to be the people's voice on the commission. Gary Farris said he tries to listen to all the arguments and expect excellence of students and of his 10 years of experience on the commission.

The candidates were asked how they view the relationship between the county and city governments. Garcia said it is on a good footing right now, with a successful partnership on the new fire station. Farris said there is good communication between the commissions, and the fire station is a particularly good project since the city wasn't going to be able to get a grocery store in the Wolak building.

Howard said the two commissions must get along and work together for the benefit of all. Linin said there is always room for improvement and promoting more teamwork between the two. He said the two commissions should work together to make Sherman County more self-reliant. Erickson said the relationship between county and city has improved lately, especially in law enforcement. He said he is here to help and working together benefits everyone. Finley said the last couple of years has been win/ win for both governments, with the sharing of the fire chief and the fire station.

The next question asked about how the city should approach rising utility costs. Finley said the commissioners are pay utility bills like all citizens, but there was no way to absorb the last increase without passing it on. He said he brought the concerns of those on fixed incomes to the discussion. Erickson said he is hoping the city can figure out how to save money on utilities, perhaps by generating more or finding cheaper costs, but the city has to keep both eyes open. He said it should look at power generation or getting a better contract. Howard said he knows people on fixed income have been hurt by recent increases. He said the city should try and negotiate a better deal and make sure that every dime spent is spent on the community.

Farris and Garcia said they both voted against the most recent increase. Farris said it was higher than necessary, but the city is locked into its long-term contract with Sunflower Electric. Garcia said he would like to see demand charges changed to lift the burden on businesses.

The candidates were asked what should be the city's priority for infrastructure improvement. Garcia said many water mains need to be replaced. The city has spent more than $3 million in recent improvements. he said, and should work in house to keep reducing water loss. Farris said last summer the city voted down a proposal by a private company to do a water system audit, and he feels that the city employees have the expertise to do it themselves.

Howard said the city should be constantly improving its infrastructure and should do it a little at a time to spread out the cost. Linin said water loss is a big concern since it is lost revenue. Streets are also a concern, he said. but any project costs money.

We have to prioritize for the long haul," he said.

Erickson said he could show people exactly where the infrastructure problems are in Goodland, and Linin said no one likes rising agreed that the work can be done meetings. Garcia said the economic in house. He said the city should development contract needs dual budget ahead and create a two- to consent to terminate. He said he three-year plan for improvements. Finley said these are problems that don't go away, even though the city has lost population and tax revenue. He agreed that the city employees have the expertise to do the work.

> Several questions were solicited from the audience, with the first asking the candidates opinion on the county commission's recent decision to try and end the economic development agreement. Finley said the problem with economic development is the benefits are not up front to see. The program has brought good things to Goodland, he said, and called the county's decision "unfortunate." Erickson agreed, and said he wanted to learn more about the reasoning behind the decision > Linin said economic development is tough because it's a longterm investment. He said this is an opportunity to work with the county to have more synergy. There are many successful collaborations, he said, such as trash service. Howard said he also wanted to hear more from the county about the decision, and said the economic development has been a good program that benefits both city and county.

Farris said he had some insight, and criticized Solomon for not providing more input at the county wanted to talk to the county about the decision.

The final question, also submitted by an audience member, asked the candidates how they would approach the lack of housing in the city. Garcia said he had been talking to developers about new efforts to build homes. It will cost, he said, but there will be long-term benefits. Farris said the city should try and provide any help it can to bring in new people. Howard said being a general contractor, he knows the price of new homes keeps going up. He said the city should look into grant money to fix up older homes and try to get the younger generation involved.

Linin said the city has been great about beautification of properties around town, which helps attract people. Northwest Kansas Technical College is always in need of housing, he said, and the city could work with it to build or rehabilitate houses. Erickson agreed that the city and college should work together. He also said the city should encourage building on the many empty lots, and that he would like to see more inexpensive apartments for younger people. Finley said the commission has been doing all it can to make Goodland more attractive to people.

heavily. He said the faculty is great about teaching students how to use technology safely.

There is always room for improvement, however. Ihrig said he is concerned over some things in the curriculum, especially science content. There are some things being taught, such as evolution, that he disagrees with. Ihrig said that while it isn't something that is pushed by teachers, it is in the textbooks and he would like to make sure that the curriculum doesn't reflect extreme views.

Beyond the curriculum, students also need good teachers, Ihrig said.

"I had good teachers when I was in school," he said. "Teachers who really took you in and pushed you to do better.'

The district needs to look at teacher retention, he said, and needs to figure out why it might lose good teachers and what it can do differently to keep them.

Ihrig said he supports the bond issue, and even if it is voted down, something will have to be done with the school buildings. The current board and administration has done a good job educating the public on the project, he said, but the issue will be decided one way or the other by the time Ihrig will be taking office if he wins in the election.

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

Pea planting time has been put on hold

By Kay Melia

Master Gardener vkmelia@vahoo.com Somebody stopped me in the dog food isle of the local big box store the other day and ask me if I was going to plant peas in my garden this year. My rather quick retort was that of course I'm going to plant peas this year, just like last year, and the year before that, and the year....ad infinitum.

Pea planting time, scheduled for this weekend at my house, has been put on hold due to "white stuff" that is either falling or melting in the area of the pea patch. So, I'll wait.

I have a feeling that garden peas are not the most planted vegetable in the High Plains garden. Nationally, only about 25 percent of backyard gardeners mess around with peas, which is a bit of a shame to my way of thinking. I don't plant very many, but to me, peas offer one of the first true tastes of an early spring garden, early unique flavor if I didn't at least plant a few.

The biggest knock I hear on peas is that they are "too labor intensive" and I suppose that's a valid assessment.

the season. They are very definitely an early season project because when summer heat arrives in mid-June, peas refuse to bloom. So, only two "pickings" are about all you can expect from your spring planting. Therefore, it is of the utmost like late in March, or as early in April as possible. It takes about 60 days from planting to harvest in this country. Soil temperatures should be above 40 degrees when you plant, or else the seed may delay sprouting and will tend to rot in a wet soil.

Another reason for the lack of pea First, you must plant them early in interest is that you not only have to pick them at the proper time, but then you have to shell them. Still, their unique spring flavor, prepared for dinner in any manner, are just delightful and well worth any effort it takes to grow them.

Thomas Jefferson. who often and I would miss that importance to plant them early, professed his preference for garden- Dwarf. He never had the good foring over governing, maintained a tune of planting such high producers lifelong contest with his friends, James Madison and George Divers. The first to harvest fresh peas in the spring would invite the others for dinner. Jefferson and his friends, like many gardeners today, believed that peas are nature's reward for making it through the winter.

advantage over Colonial cultivators. While Mr. Jefferson continually sought out new, improved varieties for his garden, he was forced to be satisfied with the likes of Black Prussian and Charleston Leedman's as Mr. Big, Maestro, Green Arrow or even the dependable old heirloom Lincoln. Nor did he know about today's snow peas or sugar snap peas which allow you to enjoy the pods as well as the fruit, either cooked, in raw form or in stir fry.

But Mr Jefferson knew that a Peagrowers today have a distinct gardener's inalienable rights included life, liberty and the pursuit of the first bounties of a new spring season!

Communities urged to support families designated April as the Month of the Military Child and encourages communities to wear purple on Monday, April 15, to honor and support military families and the sacrifices they make on behalf of the nation.

"There was a time when military families were typically assigned to a post or base, and had ready access to social and other services, including programs in place for families experiencing deployment," said Ann Domsch, Kansas' coordinator for Operation Military Kids. "Many of today's military families are, however, members of the National Guard who are living in a commu-

Elks have appreciation dinner for cops, firemen and others

The Goodland Elks Lodge had its 14th annual Appreciation Dinner hosted by the officers and trustees on Saturday, March 9.

Among the 140 people present were employees of the Goodland Police Department, Sherman County Sheriff's Department, dispatchers, area Kansas Highway Patrol, game warden, Goodland Fire Department, Sherman County Rural Fire Department and emergency medical technicians.

The Elks Citizenship Award was given to Joy and Dick Hayden for their service in the Genesis food program, U.S.D.A. Commodities food program and the Salvation Army in Goodland.

Dr. R. K. Driver and Jim Livengood received their 50-year elk lapel pin.

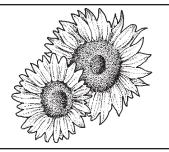

The highlight of the evening was the simulated "collapse" of an Elk member to demonstrate the immediate response by Emergency Medical Technicians as well as other first responders. This drill showed interaction between those in attendance and one that will be remembered.

The rest of the evening was spent in interactive games and music provided byBurton Pianalto, Elk member and drug awareness chairman.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of Nyla J. Finley wish to express our sincere appreciation and gratitude: to Dr. Mohedine Shafei for his years of excellent medical care and family compassion. To the Goodland Regional Medical Center staff for Nyla's loving care and compassion during her many hospital stays. To Hospice Care staff, and a special thank you to Lisa Varney for her compassionate deeds and loving kindness during Nyla's final days. To Koons Funeral Home (Linda Koons and Dane Scherling) for their sincere compassion during our time of bereavement. To Pastor Dustin Petz for the eulogy. To Jillian Korte and Geralyn Parker for providing the music and singing her favorite songs. To the wonderful ladies from Circle Three of the United Methodist Church for providing an exceptional lunch. To ALL of our many friends, neighbors and family who provided food, flowers, memorials and prayers-we can't begin to thank you enough! -Bill and Jackie Finley; Orcena (Finley) and Dan Garwood. -3-26-3-29-
