County briefed on mental health

By Kevin Bottrell

kbottrell@nwkans.com

The Sherman County Commissioners received an overview of mental health services and the issues facing mental health treatment efforts at their regular meeting last Tuesday.

High Plains Mental Health Executive Director Walter Hill, board member Gordon Pettibone and Tracy Hillmer from the Goodland office came to the commissioner meeting to deliver the organization's annual report.

High Plains Mental Health was created by an inter-local agreement of 20 northwest Kansas Counties, including Sherman County, to provide mental health services. Hill said it allowed these counties to have mental health services without having to worry about setting up their own organizations.

Hill said the agreement doesn't specify how much each county has to contribute, but the organization has created a chart based on usage of services, valuation, staffing and other factors that gives a base contri-

Car rolls north of Goodland

Two passengers were ejected from a small sports car when it lost control and went into a ditch north of Goodland early Sunday morning.

A Kansas Highway Patrol Report said Robert A. Simoneau, 20, was driving south on K-27 two miles north of Goodland in a 2004 Hyundai Tiburon when the accident happened. The report said he was "swerving all over the roadway," lost control and rolled the car two and a half times. It came to rest facing south.

Gian L. Clavell-Lopez, 19, Goodland, had his seatbelt on and stayed in the car and was uninjured. Ericka L. Sutherland, 23, Bethune, Colo., and Eduardo Palma-Chimal, 27, Goodland, who were not buckled in, were thrown from the vehicle. The report said Sutherland suffered a "possible injury," but Palma-Chimal listed as uninjured. Simoneau, who was not wearing a seatbelt, stayed in the car and was also listed as uninjured.

Students show off before Prom Saturday

It was a night of glitz and glamor for Goodland students at the High School Prom on Saturday. After a meal at the Elks Lodge, the students went to the Max Jones Fieldhouse for the Promenade, parading their dresses and tuxedos for family and friends. Maddie Mayer and Dax Ruhs (above), Stephanie Bauer and Nathan Smith (right), Lacie Cowan and Gunner Helton (far right), and Tiffany Hapke and Holton Whitman (below) were among those couples that marched through the giant roulette wheel to cheers from the audience. After parading through once, the couples all went again. After the Promenade, the students returned via bus to the Elks Lodge for the Dance.

FBI undeserving of some criticism

Boston's law enforcement is getting a lot of praise for their apprehension of the bombing suspects late last week, and deservedly so, but the Federal Bureau of Investigation is catching a lot of flak.

The FBI investigated one of the bombers in 2011. Information has come to light that that Russian authorities had informed the FBI that Tamerlan Tsarnaev — one of the Chechans who may have been responsible for last week's bombing at the Boston marathon — may have been "radicalized."

The FBI checked into Tsarnaev, but a red flag was never put on his name. The FBI says they did their due diligence, and that Russian authorities stopped cooperating. Nevertheless, Tsarnaev was allowed to leave the United States in 2010 and allowed back in.

It's a bit of a cliché to say the FBI's failures are public, but its successes are not, however it's one of those clichés that rings true. We don't tend to hear about the crimes the FBI prevents. After all, why would we? Those crimes never happened.

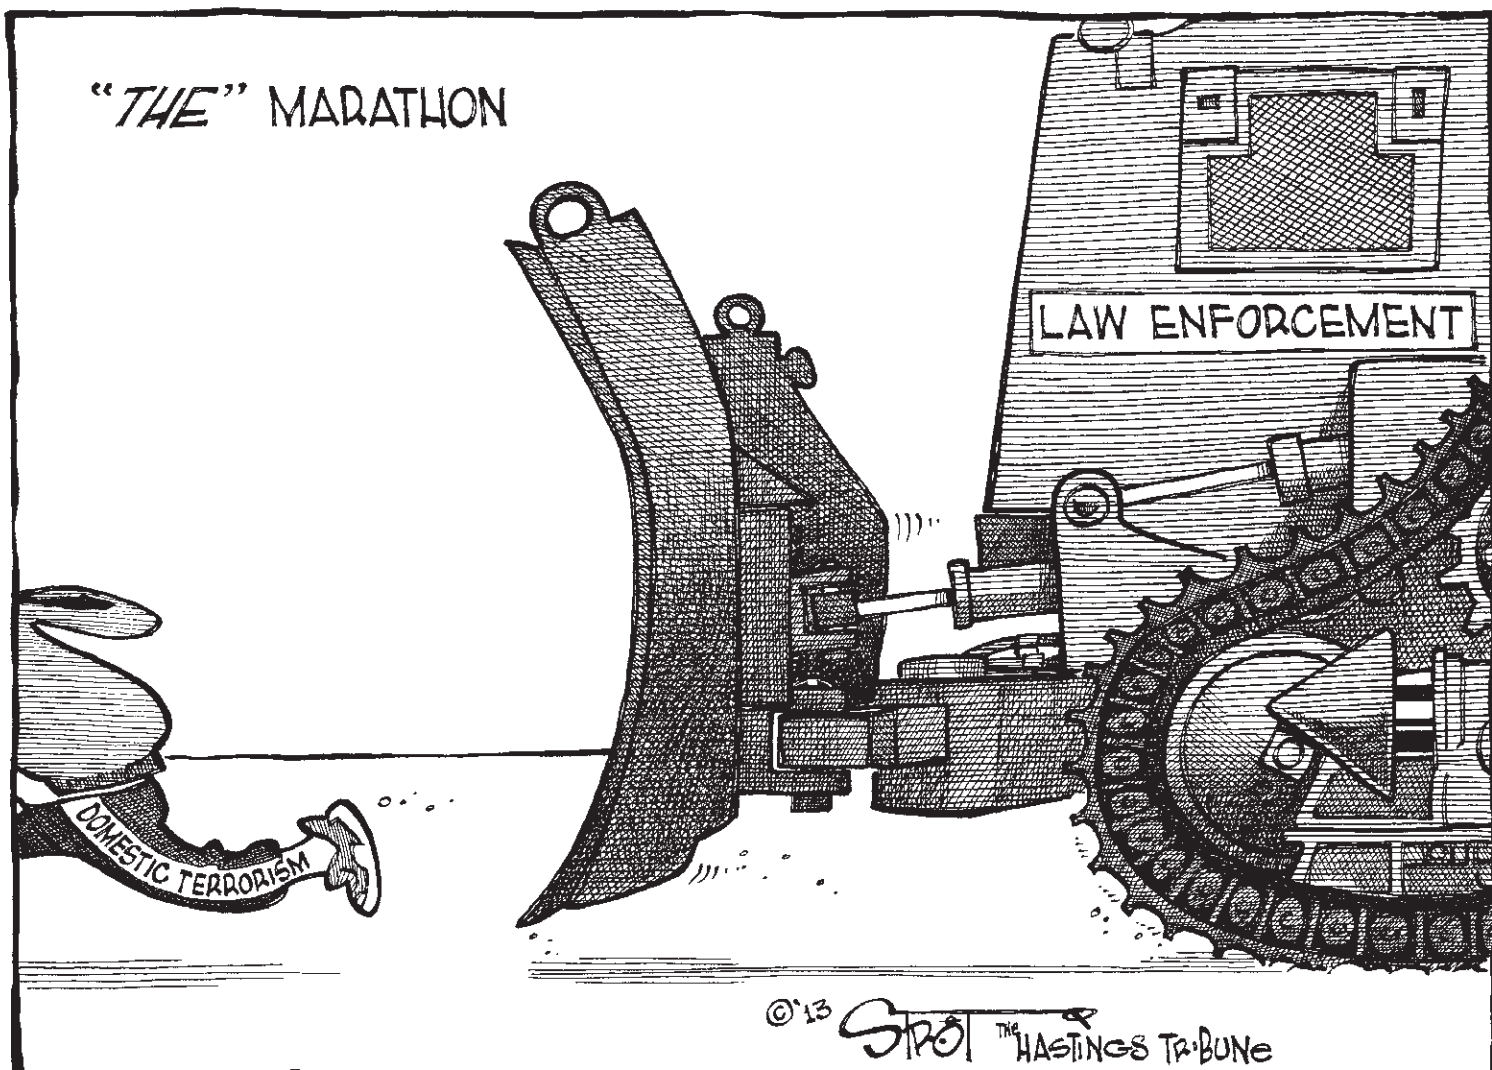

What we hear about are the ones that get through. The FBI could stop 99 out of 100 bombers, but still get crucified in the national press for the one that got away, with little mention of its success rate.

How was anyone to know that this 26-year-old flagged by Russian authorities two years ago would go on to plan this tragedy? The FBI likely gets hundreds of possible leads each day, and who knows which one will actually lead to something? It's all well and good to say "well they should run down every lead," but saying it and doing it are vastly different things.

But that doesn't stop criticism when something happens. It seems to be human nature to armchair quarterback after a national tragedy. Already the bombings are being used to play politics in the immigration debate. The national media, special interest groups and lawmakers are quick to jump on any tragedy as a means to blame.

The answer isn't necessarily easing restrictions on what the FBI can and can't do. The agency is heavily regulated and rightly so, those regulations protect the civil liberties of law abiding citizens. Living in a police state is not a fair price for a little security.

Don't judge the FBI too harshly. They have a difficult job to do, and their effectiveness is often hampered by many factors outside their control. The bottom line is no agency could guarantee preventing every crime. All we should ask is that they try. —Kevin Bottrell

Liquor, judiciary and retirement

I would like to thank everyone that contacted me during the session this year. The input from the 120th district constituents is very important to me. There are many issues that I receive both sides of a concern but it helps me get a feel for how northwest Kansas wants to be represented. I have answered each e-mail received, if the e-mail is from our district and is not a form letter. I try to answer the day I receive the contact.

Receiving hundreds of e-mails that are form letters from a lobbying group really does not do good as every legislator I know simply deletes them. The other e-mail concern is when a response is forwarded to a lobbyist group.

A few updates on some of the major areas that I received contacts:

Judiciary — the governor signed into law a bill granting Kansas governors greater influence

ward cassidy

over selection of judges to serve on the Kansas Court of Appeals. The federal model will enable governors to nominate judges for vacancies, pending confirmation by the State Senate. The governor advocated for a move away from a nominating commission that he felt gave too much influence to lawyers.

The Senate approved a state constitutional amendment that would apply the same process to the Kansas Supreme Court. The House did not vote on the measure. It could be considered in the 2014 session in time to place the issue on ballots next year.

KPERS — the House, but not the Senate, advanced a bill that would authorize sale of $1.5 billion in bonds with money invested in the pension system to cover the anticipated $9 billion shortfall between KPERS promised members and what is projected to generate in revenue over the next twenty years.

Liquor — all the talk did not produce a bill again this session. The session began with a huge push from large grocery and retail shopping interests to alter Kansas law blocking them from selling wine and liquor. Under current state law, those beverages are the domain of individual retail liquor stores.

Next two weeks I will highlight education, gun laws and other legislation of interest.

Rule by minority takes center stage

Wednesday I watched as the Senate debated eight amendments to the Gun Violence Protection Act, and the votes taken on five of those issues.

A distinction needs to be made that a majority of senators did approve passage of four of the five amendments, but because of the filibuster rule requiring 60-votes to pass anything, none of the amendments met that level and were defeated.

Without the Republican filibuster the expanded background check amendment actually would have passed on a 54-46 vote. As Plato said in The Republic "democracy is rule by the minority."

The week before it appeared there might be a chance for success as several Republican senators joined the Democrats to defeat a filibuster preventing debate on the gun violence bill. On that vote 68 senators agreed to allow the debate, and many of us who watched the floor action felt proud of how the Senate acted to allow the issue to move forward.

Tuesday and Wednesday senators rose to speak on both sides of the issues in support or in opposition to the various amendments.

President Barack Obama said in his State of the Union the people of Newtown, Conn., deserved a vote; the people of Aurora, Colo., deserved a vote; and the people of Tucson, Ariz., deserved a vote.

Wednesday the Senate did give those people a vote. It was not what was hoped for, but it was the result expected because of the imposition of the filibuster making it nearly impossible for anything to reach the 60-vote level.

tom betz

When the compromise amendment by Republican Senator Pat Toomey of Pennsylvania and Democratic Senator Joe Manchin of West Virginia, was defeated a shout rang out from the gallery "Shame on you," from the lady who had helped prevent the shooter in Tucson from reloading his gun. She was escorted out of the gallery as Vice President Joe Biden admonished people in the gallery not to interrupt the proceedings. I know Biden felt the same as he watched his former colleagues fall short of responding to the tragedy of the mass shooting at Sandy Hooke Elementary School on Dec. 14 in Newtown.

For those who watch politics the outcome was predictable, and actually the vote was much closer than it might have been without the added emotional impact of the shooting of the 20 children 5 to 6 years old.

The issue has sparked citizens to organize in support of gun safety measures and be a vocal opposition to the National Rifle Association and the pro-gun lobbyists who have had decades of influence in Washington. The continued efforts of the gun safety people may help change the dynamics. The fight on this issue is not over, and is something of similar to the dynamic of the ages old fight between the pro-life and pro-choice factions about government control or interference with a woman's decision about her body.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid of Nevada took the procedural position to vote against the Toomey-Manchin amendment. This action allows him to bring the issue back to the floor for reconsideration at any time in the next month, year or until the end of the current session in Dec. 2014.

I have seen other votes in Congress in my years of watching politics, and know the many reasons members to vote in favor or against controversial issues. The four Democrats who voted against the Toomey-Manchin amendment knew as the voting began the 60-vote margin would not be reached if they voted in favor. Knowing that gave them the "protection" to vote against. The fact is with those four Democrats voting in favor and Sen. Reid, the vote would have fallen short of the 60-votes needed for approval with a 59-41 tally.

The coming months will be interesting to watch as the Senate turns to other issues knowing in the background Sen. Reid will be looking for the right moment and positive environment to bring the expanded background check measure back to the floor hoping for a more favorable result. As President Obama said this was Round One.

Medal of Honor for Father Kapaun

The Medal of Honor, our nation's highest military award, is bestowed on the bravest of the brave.

There is no question that U.S. Army Chaplain (Capt.) Emil Kapaun of Pilsen more than deserved this honor for his service and ultimate sacrifice during the Korean War. On Thursday, April 11, on a perfect spring day in our nation's capital, his nephew, Ray Kapaun, accepted the posthumous Medal of Honor from a grateful nation.

Father Kapaun was born in Pilsen in 1916 and served as a Catholic priest before volunteering for the Army. He served during World War II and then again for the Korean War, where he was chaplain of the 8th Cavalry Regiment of the 1st Division.

He was posthumously awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for his actions in the Battle of Unsan, where he was taken prisoner. Fellow soldiers say he saved hundreds if not thousands of lives on the battlefield and in prison camps. He escaped to steal food from nearby farms to bring back to starving prisoners, and cared for the sick and injured. He died as a prisoner in May 1951 after enduring illness, torture and terrible conditions.

pat roberts

• in the senate

It is hard to share the many, many accounts of Father Kapaun's valor, grace, kindness, courage and devotion under these most difficult conditions. Many of the prisoners who served with him refer to him as the most extraordinary man they will ever know.

April 11, 2013 was a day for them. As the President said, "Many are now in their 80s, but make no mistake, they are among the strongest men that America has ever produced."

Their recollections are incredibly moving: There was Mike Dowe, who spoke of Father Kapaun's fearlessness in the face of enemy fire, and his devotion to the mental and physical wellbeing of his soldiers; hold Mass and openly pray despite the torture he would receive from his captors.

And these recollections are just a very, very few of the reams of data compiled by three men who deserve our thanks: Father John Hotze of the Diocese of Wichita, who is working on the investigation of the case for Father Kapaun's sainthood; Lt. Col. (retired) William Latham, who collected the stories of fellow prisoners to make the case for the Medal of Honor; and finally, Roy Wenzl of the Wichita Eagle, for bringing all of this work and the story to light.

And finally, thanks to Congressman Mike Pompeo and Sen. Jerry Moran for being part of the team with me that made the award possible by getting legislation passed to waive time limit on a posthumous Medal of Honor award for Father Kapaun.

Sixty-three years was far too long to properly honor Father Kapaun. If you aren't familiar with the story of his life, don't wait. Look him up. Learn about the so-called "forgotten war," and maybe, we can honor these veterans by removing that unfortunate description of their service and sacrifice in Korea.

commissioner, took the opportunity to express his views on guns in public buildings.
"It's not a good idea for people other than public officers to have guns in a public venue," he said. "I think we have a problem when everyone is carrying weapons."
The representatives did not respond.
Tax issues drew several questions. Hineman said the state has a self-imposed shortfall in the budget due to the recent efforts to eliminate the income tax. Legislators will have to cut expenses or find new revenue.
"If we don't pass tax increases, we're left with a big hole," he said, adding that any efforts to undo the tax cuts will be fought "tooth and nail" by the governor's office.

Cassidy asked the officials to raise their hands if they wanted to see state income taxes eliminated. No hands came up.
All three representatives strongly discouraged their constituents from forwarding canned e-mails.
"We're northwest Kansas," said Cassidy. "We talk to each other."
The representatives said they like to receive e-mails and phone calls from their constituents, though Boldra said she prefers to talk personally on the phone. Cassidy said he is guarded in his e-mail responses because he does not always want his positions publicized, so he encouraged his constituents to call him when they want to discuss controversial topics.

County commissioners get briefed on mental health

tribution for each county. Beyond that, it is up to each county to decide how much to pay in. Sherman County's contribution comes out of a quarter-cent health care sales tax.
The organization maintains an office in Goodland with Tracy, a full time therapist.
Hill said the biggest challenge is state funding.
"Only about 8 percent comes from the counties," he said, "the rest comes from the state, and that has been decreasing. We've made up for it by efficiency and downsizing."
Funding for mental health treatment was cut again recently, he said, which they expected to cost High Plains Mental Health about $490,000. Commissioner Ken Klemm asked what the organization's policy is when it gets cut. Hill said they look at ways to cut costs or downsize, rather than ask for more money from the counties.
The organization also struggles to get paid by its patients, he said, since many cannot afford to pay and have no insurance.
Commissioner Larry Enfield said he did not know how much the county would be contributing next year, as that will be decided when the county puts together its 2014 budget.
In other business, the commissioners:

• Read a resolution from the Ford County Commissioners that calls on the Kansas Legislature and governor to call for a budget balance Constitutional Convention. The commissioners said they were in favor of something like that, and asked county staff to draw up a resolution for Sherman County.
• Heard from Michael Dorn, who said the ambulance department is planning an event for Emergency Medical Services week: May 19 through 25. Dorn said the department has been kicking around ideas, such as an open house for kids at the new ambulance and fire station. The commissioners instructed Dorn to come up with a definite plan and come back to the Tuesday, April 30, meeting.
• Discussed the courthouse water. Extension Agent Dana Belshe, said he had sent a sample away for testing, and it had come back positive for iron bacteria. This is common in buildings with old pipes, he said. The bacteria is not a health risk, but can cause the water to become cloudy and smell bad. It is also hard to remove without completely replacing the building's pipes. The commissioners decided to look into filtration systems.
• Addressed concerns from the hospital. Klemm said he had spoken to hospital board chairman Harlan House, and some employees have been concerned that the commissioners' discussions about privatizing the hospital several weeks ago means they want to shut it down completely.
Klemm said he wanted to make it clear that shutting the hospital down was not the commissioners' intention, and that having a private company take it over is just one possible method to helping it deal with the current healthcare climate.
"The intention is to make it more secure, not shut it down," he said. "If it was part of a larger group it would have more sway."
Enfield said that in any case the commission can't just close or sell the hospital by itself. The hospital board can, or it can go before the voters if there is a petition with more than 5 percent of registered voters.
• Approved a bid from McClung's for a washer and dryer in the amount of $2,238.
• Discussed adding a tool and compressor room as well as safety lights to the new fire station. The changes will cost about $10,000 extra.

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!
