July Fourth finally celebrated despite rain

Well, the fourth finally got celebrated between the awful winds and rains. During that one bad blast of lightning, I heard an awful crack but didn’t really get too excited until I looked out and saw a limb on the street.

It really wasn’t interfering with the traffic, but it still gave me a chill. At daylight, I could see another larger limb hanging loose in the tree that could have been blown down if we got winds like last night.

A call to the street people, and they came and got the mess up from the street and hauled it away. Thanks to them for doing that for me.

The little kids picked up the smaller mess and put them in my trash barrel to be hauled away by the neighbors on their next trip to the dump. It’s good to have such kind neighbors.

I talked to Isabelle Hellerud at the event at the Handy House on Sunday afternoon. She’s doing pretty well as is her son Tim. I stayed in the van and watched the goings on. Bud had parked so I could both see and hear.

I don’t like walking on grass, and that’s where the tables and chairs were placed for both the program and the ice cream social after the burning of the mortgage.

Once again the weather looked bad and most everything was shut down at the fairgrounds. Monday night was a repeat of bad weather, but the television wasn’t predicting anything for Tuesday.

The rains we’ve gotten have been too late for most of the wheat. One farmer didn’t even dirty the combine as the insurance adjuster said it didn’t justify doing that as the yield wouldn’t even pay for most of the expense. Those poor farmers have a lousy year again.

Anniversaries on my calendar include those of Janet and Perry Warren and Father Hal and Mary’s. Best wishes to these and anyone else so celebrating.

Birthdays include those of Richard Golden and Ila Ziegler. Best wishes to these folks and any others.

There’s not much news as the fourth of July preparations took most peoples’ attentions, as did the weather and trying to get harvested what they could.

I don’t know of anyone sick except my neighbor Jonathan who has had some problems since his surgery in Hays. He’s back home and is better. Bud and Pat are continuing their medical care in Hays. Best wishes to these and any others.

I must close and get this ready for the paper. Take care until next time. If predictions come true, we’ll be getting our July heat in the next few days. So be extra kind to your outdoor pets during these hotter days ahead. Keep a check on your elderly neighbors living alone. Until next issue, take care.
