Tip jars are unwelcome sight at events

DEAR ABBY: When I read the letter from "All Tipped Out," commenting on the increasing number of "tip jars" she encounters in business establishments, I had to write and say I couldn't agree more.

I first noticed the phenomenon about 15 years ago, at a wine-andcheese fund-raiser for an organization to which I belonged. I was flabbergasted to see that the people ouring the wine had a tin iar on the bar. I assumed that we had hired these people as part of the contract, and certainly never expected to see them blatantly soliciting tips. However, I couldn't convince the event organizers to do anything about it.

the open bars at weddings. Only slightly less blatant way. once have I seen the father of the bride have the good sense and righ-fice to have a procedure done. It was teous indignation to order them re- not performed by the doctor, but by moved immediately.

There is no reason to tolerate paid help hustling one's invited guests for tips. You wouldn't put up with this at a catered event at your home.

– PAT C., HOCKESSIN, DEL. DEAR PAT: Good point. Frankly, I too was surprised at how prevalent

the practice has become. Read on: DEAR ABBY: Please tell "All Tipped Out" to hold onto her hat. There is a doctor's office in our town—a beautiful facility with lots of employees and patients — that Since then, I have seen tip jars on does the same thing, although in a

A friend of mine went to this of-a technician. When she went to pay at the reception desk, she was asked if she would like to "tip" the technician.

I have no problem tipping in establishments where I know the emwage and depend on tips to supplement their incomes. However, I have no doubt that technician was earning more than minimum wage, and I don't think it was appropriate to ask a patient for a tip.

I will be more on my toes than my friend was. I will say, "Perhaps the doctor should give his technician a kept in check. - E. CLAIRE IN raise if she needs tips." — AL-WAYS A NEW TWIST IN WYO-MING

DEAR NEW TWIST: What you have described seems more like a demand than a request, and it's appalling.

DEAR ABBY: I work in a local bakery, and there is a tip jar; howployees are not receiving minimum ever, the employees who work the counter earn the same as everyone else, and it's more than minimum cheerful, and says "please" and wage. Yet they expect tips and make rude comments when the customer leaves if they are not received. I find this embarrassing. I'd be less dismayed if the tips were divided by everyone, and the comments were IN CANADA

> CAMBRIDGE DEAR E. CLAIRE: Your boss that's a subject for another column. should be made aware of what's going on in the front of his shop. If word leaks out, it will affect the business.

DEAR ABBY: I work in a small restaurant where there's a tip jar on the counter. I don't "expect" tips because of it. What makes my day is when a customer is friendly, "thank you." "All Tipped Out" needn't feel obligated to tip. Just being polite and friendly will make an employee's day far more than any tip could. — HAPPY SERVER
