Letters make memories forever

DEAR READERS: Seven years ago, I told you about a new program called the Legacy Project that had been created to honor American veterans by preserving their wartime letters. I asked you to send a photocopy of a favorite war letter that you or a loved one

The response was overwhelming. Since its inception in 1998, the Legacy Project has received an estimated 75,000 never-before-seen letters from every concluding e-mails from Iraq and Af-announced that the entire collection will be donated to the prestigious Gilder Lehrman Institute in New York City, where the letters will be archived for posterity. In honor of Veterans Day, I will share with you one of the letters from the collection. It was handwritten by a young soldier named Justin Merhoff, who currently serves in the U.S. Army and will soon be deployed to Afghanistan. flict in our nation's history — in- It was addressed to his grandfather, Hugh Merhoff:

"Dear Gramps: I want to write I thought you'd like to know you and let you know what I am that the Legacy Project has just doing these days. I found out that they are all my brothers and sis- am in the Army today. You inning five of the 22 funeral honors teams that represent the 10th Mountain Division.

neral before, I did not know what happened during World War II, to expect. There were times that I had to try not to cry after seeing the family go through the turmoil that death brings. These emotions were new to me and were hard to take at first. What really got me was that there were guys who were not U.S. citizens but were fighting for our country. I might never have met these soldiers, but untless lives. You are the reason I
