Kids create sculptures with tape, imagination

There was clear tape everywhere, some of it on the rolls, some on the kids and even more of it formed into a rock star, a ballerina, a hippie and a Hawaiian yoga girl.

Atall guy with large feet was still waiting for arms and an identity, but the kids were having a ball. The results are on display at the Carnegie Arts Center through the end of June.

While the rain poured down outside, the center's basement was a body-part-and-costume workshop Friday afternoon. "Stuck on George Segal," a class in the center's Summer Art Institute, explored the figurative sculpture work of artist George Segal, who is known for his sculptures using plaster casts made with medical bandaging.

Tranda Ihrig, an art education student at Emporia State University, taught kids fifth grade and older to make sculptures by wrapping themselves in clear tape, sticky side out and then sticky side in to form a figure. The figures were built body part by body part, with Ihrig helping the kids to cut a slit in each part to pull it off and then re-taping it together.

The parts were assembled into a person and then dressed. For the heads, they taped over foam storedisplay heads, rather than their own.

Ihrig, daughter of Lynn and DeeAnn Ihrig of Goodland, said she got the idea from a seminar she attended with a class to glean projects for students when she becomes a teacher.

The figures can be hung outside houses like ghosts, she said, or can figure with long legs and big feet be put out in the snow with footprints leading up to them.

The kids were letting their imagination run wild while inventing their characters. Elizabeth Wellmann was building a ballerina, while Morgan Podojil was building a Hawaiian yoga girl, whom she named Lilli. Podojil said she is Lilli's yoga mas-

Lacie Cowan was having trouble deciding whether to put a blonde or a blue wig on her rock star, who wore a red T-shirt and a red feather boa. She chose blue.

Brooke Lockhart and Chloe Goodwin teamed up on a hippie in aneon, rainbow-colored tie-dyed Tshirt and jeans with a curly yellow wig. But they had to decide which gender to go with on the '70s throwback character.

Brendan Flodin had a clear-tape who hadn't yet found his identity. Ihrig said she brought props to help the students along, including coconut bras, leis and assorted wigs.

Two men arrested for joy ride in Colby after police assist them with car trouble

Colby Free Press A May 20 joyride resulted in two men, one from Colby and one from Goodland, being charged with multiple crimes.

Wesley L. Phillips, 22, of Colby, and Christopher M. Boster, 26, of Goodland, are accused of taking a 1999 Pontiac owned by Tammy Jurek, a Thomas County resident.

Phillips and Boster are alleged to have taken the car, which had been driven to town by Jurek's son, Eric, about 11:45 p.m. and returned to where it had been parked about 12:30 a.m.

Colby man victim, defendant in separate cases

Eric Jurek, 18, is not only the victim in Thomas County court case, he's the defendant in one. He was charged on April 20 with one count each of criminal threat and harassment by telephone.

Jurek, a high school student, is alleged to have called Andrew Boell, a math teacher at Colby High School, on Feb. 17, and threatened to punch him in the face and back in the area of his kidneys.

According to court documents, the criminal threat charge is a level 9 felony, while the phone harassment charge is a Class Anon person misdemeanor. Should Jurek be convicted of either of these charges, he'd be sentenced under a set of guidelines different from those of an adult. The penalties could include from nine to 18 months in a juvenile correctional facility and a post-release probation up to 24 months.
