"Through KLA, I have a voice!"

Leonard Tucker
Cow-calf operator
KLA member
Gove, Kansas

Where else can a cow-calf producer with 50 head have the same voting power as a feedyard owner with 50,000 head?

Leonard Tucker has heard the grumblings about how KLA is run by feedlots, but as an active member of the organization and a cow-calf operator, he can see through the rumors. "Regardless of size or structure, KLA represents all of its members - and each of those members, whether they own a feedyard, a stocker operation or cow-calf herd, has one vote in the policy process," he says. And, according to Tucker, smaller operators like he is, make up the majority of KLA membership. "KLA is a place where any individual beef producer can bring an issue forward. If you have a concern, and are willing to voice it, you will be listened to."
