WEATHER

Decatur County Forecast for May 6th - May 12th

6:37 to 6:30am 8:40 to 8:47pm

Periodic showers will continue this week as a series of storm systems develop over the southwest Plains and head to the Mississippi River Valley. We'll be on the north side of these storm systems. That will keep us in the somewhat cooler air and away from a threat of significant severe weather. Temperatures will hove right around normal and rainfall will total between a half inch and one inch. Next week the storm track shifts to the north and temperatures will be a little warmer. Cooler air will swing in by the end of next next week.
