

IN SHADES Leta Meitl (above) showed off a three quarter length shirt with writing and a picture on it. Christina Bryan (left) wore a red hat with matching skirt, shirt and scarf for the fashion show Sunday. Anna Shaw (below) and Karen Metcalf stood behind the podium for a short time during the show.

Models show latest fashions for pool project

Forty to 50 women got a chance to see some of the new outfits for spring and summer at a fashion show, sponsored by the Dresser, on Sunday at The Gateway.

Over 20 models, which included women who shop at the store in downtown Oberlin, showed off some of their favorite outfits which some of the owners of the business chose for them.

Judy Ostmeier, with the Dresser, said the spring and summer line just came out, so it was a good time to showcase the clothes. She said they may get some more in for summer, but not too many.

This year, she said, pink and green are still big, and so are capri pants. The store is still getting in ponchos, jewelry is big and so are hats. Mrs. Ostmeier said they are starting to carry more hats of different styles than they ever have before.

Instead of charging for the show, the Dresser took donations for the swimming pool project. Mrs. Ostmeier said she thought they raised around $500. Each time the store has a fashion show, she said, they try to raise money for some cause in the community.

Before the show, the women enjoyed punch and cookies and afterwards, they had a chance to go shopping. Mrs. Ostmeier said some of those attending purchased items they had seen.

Herald staff photos by Karla Jones