Make Halloween safe, fun

Aside from the free candy, deciding on a costume is the most exciting part of Halloween for many kids, but don't overlook the fact that costumes can cause injuries if you're not careful.

Pick costumes that are flame retardant so the child will be safe from candle-lit pumpkins on porches. Make sure they can walk freely and won't trip; a good rule of thumb is for the costume not to go past the ankles.

Props like swords and knives should be made of flexible material so nobody gets hurt.

It's also important that children can see well out of masks so they can avoid obstacles, and can see cars coming when they're crossing the street.

If the eyeholes are too small, cut bigger ones. Applying reflective tape to costumes and candy bags will make it easy for motorists to see children in the dark.

Before children go trick-or-treating, review safety rules with them such, including which neighborhoods they should or shouldn't go to. Remind them not to enter homes or apartment complexes and not to approach homes that don't have a porch light on.

'We need to raise strong children' By Pastor Carrie Buhler

of the Jennings and Dresden United Methodist churches

you are away, when you are resting and when you are working. Write them on the doorposts of your houses and your gates. Then you and your children will live a long time in the land that the Lord your God promised to give to your ancestors." (Deuteronomy 11: 18-21)

My husband was raised in Salt Lake City and we usually drive out there once a year to see all of the relatives. Over time we've noticed what a difference there is between our kids and their cousins. I'm not sure if it's just that the kids are being raised in different environments or that they are raising their kids differently than we are, but I know that no matter what, my kids are going to be all right, and theirs aren't.

Country kids are tough. They have to be. My kids can climb over anything, do Superman leaps off of everything, and chase the farm animals around. It doesn't matter if they fall or get knocked down, they just get up, brush their hands on their overalls and keep going. When our billy goat shoved Joey, he shoved the billy goat right back!

Our kids eat everything we do – I'm not making three different dinners each night! Our kids are healthy and hardly ever get sick. I do hand out my share of "Blue's Clues" and "Strawberry ethic. It seems a lot of city folks bought into the "feelgood," "new-age," "whatever-happens-don't-bruisetheir-inner-child" sort of parenting that was floating around a few years ago. Thankfully, it doesn't seem to have made it out to the farms and ranches and small towns.

I guess if I had to name our style of parenting it would be "common sense." Country folks have a lot of it. We would be incapable of maintaining our lifestyles without it. Our farms wouldn't produce crops and our livestock would die. We work hard to be the same folks on Saturday night that we are in church on Sunday morning

I see city kids on the news who are violent, sullen, disrespectful of everyone - including themselves uneducated and unable to cope with life's challenges. They've received no moral or spiritual guidance. They only know what they see on their TV, in the theaters and in their violent fantasy video games.

I truly believe that the kids who are going to be the backbone of this nation as we go into the twenty-first century will be the country kids. They have been given guidance in morality, spirituality and a good work
