FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ABOUT AGE-RELATED MACULAR DEGENERATION

What is AMD?
AMD Stands for Age-related Macular Degeneration, a disease that breaks down the macula. It blurs the straight-ahead vision required for activities such as reading and driving.

Who is at risk?
Risk factors for AMD include: Smoking, High Blood Pressure, Obesity, and Family History of AMD. Also, whites and females are more prone to AMD.

What causes AMD?
The causes of AMD are still unknown. One form of AMD (Dry) may be caused by aging and thinning of the macular tissues, pigment deposits in the macula, or a combination of the two. The other form of AMD (Wet), results when new blood vessels grow beneath the retina and leak blood and fluid. This leakage causes retinal cells to die and creates blind spots in central vision. Factors which seem to lead to macular degeneration, other than age, include hypertension, diabetes, vascular diseases, and nutritional considerations. In addition, patients with light colored eyes, those who smoke, and those exposed to UV and blue-violet sun rays seem to be especially vulnerable to macular degeneration.

How can AMD be detected?
Early-stage AMD can be detected through a comprehensive eye exam that includes a visual acuity test, dilated eye exam and tonometry. If AMD is detected, further tests may be required.

Can AMD be cured?
There is no cure for AMD at this time. There are, however, certain treatments that can slow or minimize vision loss, and, in some cases, even improve vision.

How is AMD treated?
There are several treatment options that your eye doctor may consider, including vitamins, drug therapy, laser surgery.

What are the symptoms?
Early symptoms of AMD includes blurred vision or dark spots in the center of vision. The symptoms can appear painlessly and gradually, making early detection and treatment essential.

It is estimated that between 13 and 15 million Americans have evidence of AMD. If you or someone you know is at risk for AMD, schedule a comprehensive eye examination with Dr. Stamm or Dr. Gray today.
