---------------------	---------------------	---------------------	---------------------	---------------------

Normal High: 85
 Normal Low: 55

After several days of warm and dry weather, chances for rain increase today and tomorrow, while temperatures hover around a muggy 80 degrees. Thunderstorms associated with this disturbance will be slow moving producing locally heavy rainfall (1" to 3") and this time of the year severe weather in the form of large hail and damaging winds are always a possibility. If we pick up an inch and get no hail great news for this year's wheat crop! Drier and warmer weather returns Thursday and Friday then continues through the weekend.
