City approves library ordinance

The Oberlin City Council approved a charter ordinance allowing the library board to include up to two people who live outside city limits at any one time.

City Attorney Steve Hirsch reviewed the ordinance for legality and said it was OK, said City Administrator Gary Shike at the meeting Thursday, April 17.

How did this come up in the first place? asked Councilwoman Rhonda May. How long has the city been out of compliance?

Currently the seven member board includes elementary Principal Duane Dorshorst, who lives outside city limits, but in the county, said Mr. Shike.

Councilman Rob McFee said when Mr. Dorshorst started on the board, he lived in the city. But how long has he lived in the county? asked Ms. May. Several years, said Councilman Ray Ward.

The county does help support the library, said Mr. Shike, by paying for a membership into the Northwest Kansas Library System. Basically, he said, the county pays into the system, which helps all of the libraries in the county, including the city library in Oberlin, one at the high school, one at the grade school and those in Jennings and Norcat.

Mr. Hirsch said he thought a request came from someone in the library system who told her the board didn't comply with state law.

So basically, asked Councilman Jay Anderson, this is a housekeeping thing? Is it OK to change it? Yes, said Mr. Hirsch.

Is there any reason the council wouldn't want to vote to change this? asked Mayor Joe Stanley.

It is a step toward fostering a good city-county relationship, said Ms. May.

The ordinance passed on a unanimous vote.

Commissioners sign support letter

Decatur County commissioners were asked if the county would help tear down the old Golden Age Center and Sunflower Cinema and for a support letter to build a new center, and all agreed to sign it.

Greg Lohofener, who is working on the project, told commissioners the group would like a letter of support from the county and help in applying for a loan through the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development service.

He said the current proposal includes demolition by the county crew, with the city helping. Mr. Lohofener said he still needs to talk with the Oberlin City Council. Later in the meeting, commissioners talked with Road and Bridge Supervisor Tim Stallman about using the county crew and equipment to tear down the old buildings.

Actually, said Mr. Stallman, he has been thinking about buying an excavator for the county. It could be used to tear down the buildings.

No decision was made on the demolition.
