Nascar driver visits track, talks safety

A three-time Nascar winner talked with racers Monday in Oberlin about safety and signed autographs for fans.

Randy LaJoie, who won the Nascar Busch Series in 1996 and 1997 and the Nascar North in 1985, was in town for the Blood, Sweat and Tears race Monday night.

Mr. LaJoie said he's out on a safer racing tour, which started last year, at the short tracks. This year, he said, he's been to seven tracks, starting in Ohio and working his way to Oberlin. This race was his 15th and final day on the road.

He said after the race Monday he would head home to North Carolina.

Nascar, said Mr. LaJoie, has made racing very safe since the death of Dale Earnhart Sr. He said he's passing on that information to those working and racing on the short track circuit. "Small things really make a huge difference," he said.

One of those things is the seat the driver uses. After feeling like he was a crash test dummy for more than 20 years, he said, in 1993 he started his company, The Joie of Seating, to build form fitted aluminum seats.

Drivers need to not be able to be rattled around in their seats. Instead it should hold their heads and shoulders.

Racing is a dangerous sport, said Mr. LaJoie, but there are things racers can do to make it safer. Sometimes, it seems racers are the slowest people to make safety changes, he said.

Mr. LaJoie said Oberlin's David Murray, who just got his 402 win, has been using the seat for the last four years.

Mr. LaJoie said he learned the importance of a good race seat from his dad, five-time Danbury Race arena Champion, Don LaJoie, who used a form-fitted seat.

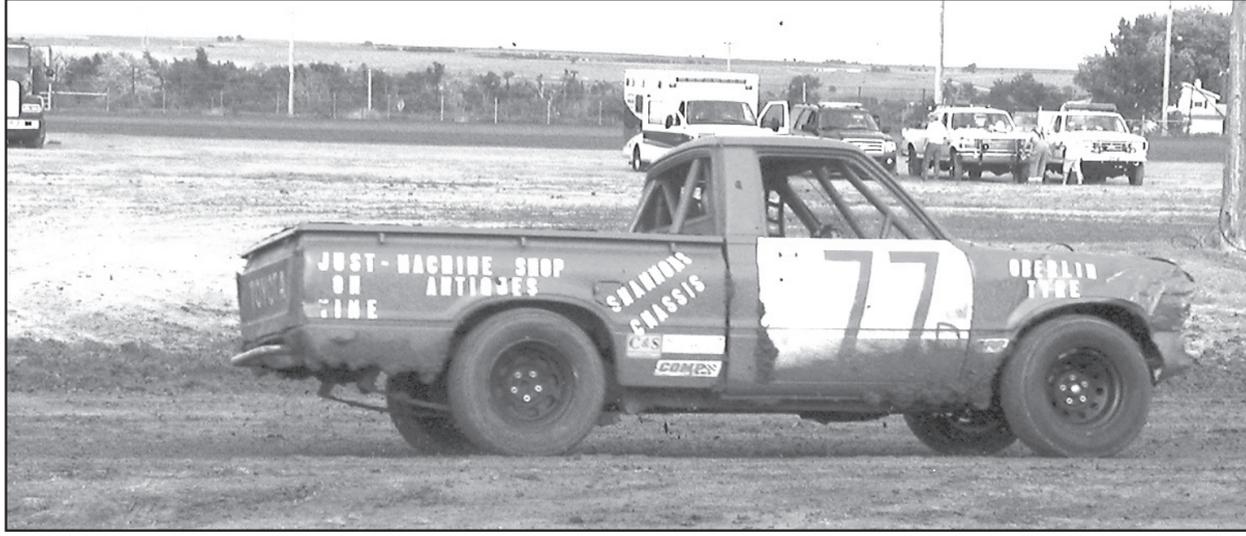

Mr. LaJoie said he spent 25 years doing full-time racing. Now he is passing the tradition down to his sons Corey, 16 and Casey, 14. Corey wants to race and is committed and works on his cars, his dad said.

Over his years of racing, he said, he has never raced full-time in the cup series because it was always important to stay home with the kids and family on Sunday.

Mr. LaJoie took his turn racing on the dirt tracks the past three nights finishing 10th, 14th and 16th, but was not planning to race in Oberlin, because his hip was hurting him.

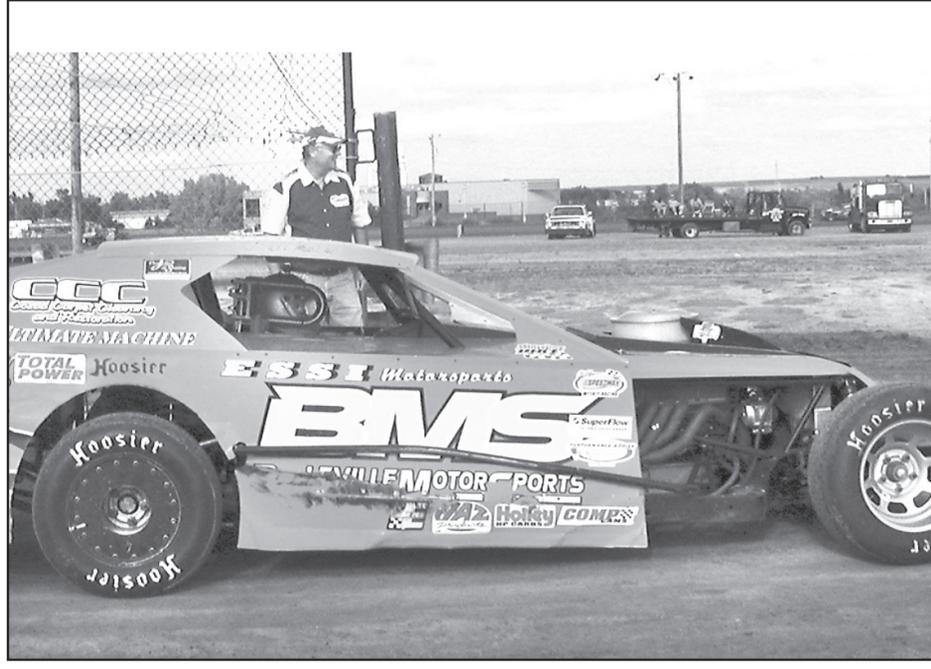

Racing on a dirt track, he said, is totally different than racing on an asphalt or concrete one.

While this is his last stop for now, he said he has six more events planned for the year.

TRUCKS AND CARS WAITED for the good ahead to go for a few warm-up laps. Racing started at 7 p.m. onto the Oberlin Speedway track at 6:30 p.m. Monday night
