* Senator talks about maps, carnivals

 “We’re really in quite a disarray,” the senator said, noting that the Senate is split three ways with eight Democrats and 14 or so “moderate” Republicans and 14 hard-core conservatives. The Democrats vote with the left-wing Republicans when they see an advantage, but the House is much more conservative.
 The districts have to be drawn and the budget adopted when the Legislature returns to Topeka this week, Sen. Ostmeyer said.
 “That’ll be the first order of business when we go back,” he said.
 On other bills, the senator said a threat to put home-owned carnivals under state regulation failed in committee.
 “Norton had an accident last year,” he said. “It wasn’t serious at all. It didn’t seem to me to be any problem.”
 However, the secretary of labor, former Sen. Karin Brownlee, put forth a bill to regulate the community-run carnivals. It took a personal appeal to Gov. Sam Brownback to get things turned around, Sen. Ostmeyer said.

 He said he hopes the secretary, who is from Johnson County, will come out and visit some of the carnivals this year.
 Starting this summer, he said, home-owned carnivals will have to provide the state with a certificate of insurance, but won’t be inspected.
 A move to resume charging senior citizens for hunting and fishing licenses has been scaled back, he said. With the population getting older, he said, the Department of Wildlife, Parks and Tourism simply can’t afford to exempt everyone over 65, but as the bill was amended, people 65 to 74 can buy a lifetime hunt-fish license for $40. That should still qualify the department for full federal money for each license sold, he said.
 “I’m willing to do that as a 68-year-old,” he said, adding that with the cost of going hunting, “the license would be the cheapest thing you’d have.”

 Agreement on the budget, he said, fell apart because the House wanted to cut transportation to make up for money added to education.
 The senator said he was “disappointed” that Chief Justice Lawton Nuss had chosen to start “furlough days” for state court workers because of the budget standoff. He said the move could only hurt salaried court workers, who will lose at least two days’ pay.
 “He knows that the process hasn’t really gone to pot,” Sen. Ostmeyer said. “The person who has a job will be hurt. I’m bothered by that.”
 He said a constitutional amendment to prevent schools and other agencies from using state money to sue the Legislature had failed in the House and won’t come up in the Senate.
 “If they couldn’t get it passed in the House,” he said, “it’ll never pass in the Senate.”

* Registrars got warning from the state

 Nearly ten percent of those mailed out are returned undelivered on account of failure by the doctor to give right post office address.
 Another ten percent of the whole are returned by the parents for correction on account of errors in spelling the names of child or parents.
 The local registrar can correct these birth certificates in many instances, especially as to post office address.
 Many of the local registrars are turning in birth and death certificates without any apparent effort having been made to supply omitted data. I advise those to read the law carefully, and note that they are not entitled to pay for incomplete certificates.
 Why not give the people you serve a square deal in the registration work.

Best wishes to all her relatives.
 Yours truly,
 Jenne Barnard, Registrar.

Mrs. Wm L. Jennings
 Oberlin, Kansas

Dear Mrs. Jennings:
 Dr. Tilden reports the arrival of a baby girl at your home on the 20th. Have you named her yet?
 If you can find a name and get it to me by the Fourth of Oct. so I may send it to the state she will be a registered baby, costs nothing and might come in mighty handy some time in her life.
 Just add her name on bottom of this and mail so I may sent it to Topeka on the fifth of next month.

Health agency gives county update

The Decatur County commissioners talked with representatives from High Plains Mental Health about the agency’s budget request for next year.
 Dave Anderson and Ken Loos were at the meeting Tuesday, April 3. They said the county gave the organization $23,794 last year.
 Commissioner Stan McEvoy said Deputy Jay Tate, who represents the county on the group’s board, came in and talked to the commissioners recently since he wasn’t going to be at the meeting last week.
 Mr. Anderson said this is the 48th year that the mental health service has had a relationship with the counties it serves. Deputy Tate and Ambulance Director Linda Manning serve on the board for Decatur County.
 There were 103 people served in Decatur County, said Mr. Loos.

Mental health, he noted, is just like physical health: it’s better to catch things early. Fifty-six people were served at the office here.
 It looks like over the last decade, Decatur County has had right around 100 people served each year, said Mr. Anderson. He heads up the complaint department, so if anyone hears anything, they should call him.
 Commissioner Ralph Unger said he hasn’t had any complaints about the group’s services.
 He added that he appreciates the service High Plains has provided over the years for people in the county.

Commissioners buy new cooling unit for center

The Decatur County commissioners approved the purchase of a new air conditioning unit from Norton Sheet Metal for $9,995 <to do what??>.
 The replacement bids include setting the units up, said Mr. May, adding that they are going to need help getting the old air conditioner off the roof and the new one up there.
 He said he talked to the Road and Bridge Department about using the county’s crane. The city will need to drop some of the power lines for a few hours, he said. Mr. May added that he knows the city is busy right now.

The old unit is a Lennox, said Mr. May. Commissioners suggested they hold on to the old unit for parts. The center has no place to store it, Mr. May said.
 Commissioner Ralph Unger said they could talk with Road and Bridge Supervisor Tim Stallman to see if a corner of the shop is available for storage.

 The commissioners talked with Mr. Stallman about using the county crane to get the new unit in place and the old one off the roof. They also asked him to see how much it would cost to have someone come in and do the job.

Decatur County Treasurer’s Office will NOT be able to
