Selden Fire Chief Steve Rogers said he responded to the accident, along with troopers from the Kansas Highway Patrol, around 9 a.m. He said the driver of an Allied Cementing truck was heading west on U.S. 83 when the right front tire

The truck careened through the ditch, with the tractor ending up on its side on the Kyle Railroad

No report of the accident was listed in the online log maintained by the highway patrol, and a call to the patrol was not returned. A call to the owner of the truck, Allied Cementing Co., an oil-field service firm in Oakley, drew only a terse "no comment."

A story in the History Section in the same issue about the Grossniklaus building said that the upstairs was remodeled by the present owners, Fred and Wanda Hardman, which was true. However, Owen and Sharon King, who operated an upholstery business and Christian Book Store there, said that they first remodeled the upstairs for an apartment and installed new doors at the bottom of the stairway when they were owners. This was additional information received from the Kings
